PREFACE

The editors of Webster's New Ideal Dictionary have endeavored to make easily accessible the greatest possible amount of accurate information concerning words that are most likely to be looked for by the business man, the stenographer, the mother who would answer the ordinary questions of her children, or, in fact, by any who may wish to become more efficient through a better use of the English tongue.

To make the material easily accessible, an especially clear type is used and one of a size that can be quickly read. All obsolete words and obsolete meanings of common words are omitted. Definitions are made as brief as accuracy permits, but enough is always retained to explain a word's real meaning and to make clear its correct use.

Pronunciations are given in the well-known and almost universally adopted Webster system of symbols, which employs a separate symbol for each clearly differentiated vowel sound while avoiding a minuteness of analysis that leads to confusion.

The correct spelling of plurals is clearly shown, likewise the principal parts of verbs, the comparative and superlative forms of adjectives and adverbs, the case forms of pronouns, etc., whenever these are in doubt or differ from what might be expected. The use of capital letters is clearly indicated.

The main vocabulary is very full, including all words of a general character and also technical terms when of wide distribution. Naturally, important terms of recent origin, like aerodrome, aerogram, syndicalism, are given due recognition.

The Departments following the main vocabulary are of great value. The wide range of subjects covered is shown by the list in the Contents, page V.

The Gazetteer is thoroughly up-to-date both in the spelling and the pronunciation of the names recorded and in the statistical information contained.

The tables of historical and statistical matter, the notes on business and constitutional law, and the like contain information that every one should know or have within easy reach.

The information given in the section on Punctuation, Use of Capitals, etc., and in that on the Preparation of Copy for the Press will be valued by all who ever have occasion to write important letters or to prepare circulars, advertisements, or other forms of copy for the printer. By following the suggestions there given much inconvenience, delay, and expense due to type changes will be saved.

The numerous plates of illustrations, both half-tones and line engravings, have been selected with much care from thousands of photographs and engravings. The valuable diagrams in color show in graphic form many important statistical facts whose meaning the mind fails to grasp or realize when presented merely in tables of figures.

The fact that the main dictionary is abridged from Webster's New International Dictionary, the latest and greatest of the great Merriam Series, and that the work of abridgment was done by trained editors, selected from the large corps that prepared the New International, insures the accuracy and authority of Webster's New Ideal Dictionary.

Preferred Forms of Spelling or Pronunciation. When two or more forms of spelling or of pronunciation are recorded the general rule has been to place first the one that has been selected as preferable. Each form entered, however, has the support of good usage, that may be almost equally divided.

Capitalization. When a word should begin with a capital letter the vocabulary word itself begins with a capital. Where, in a specific use, a different style from that shown by the vocabulary entry is to be followed, [cap.] (meaning a capital initial) or [l. c.] (meaning a lower case or small initial) is inserted at the definition affected.

Hyphenated Words. Words that are to be written or printed with a hyphen have this hyphen indicated by a mark - longer and heavier than the short light hyphen - used to show division into syllables; as in a'ble-bod'led.

Pronunciation. A part or the whole of a pronunciation is often omitted when it is the same as that of a word immediately preceding.

The accentuation only is given for some compound words, and for some derivatives ending in common suffixes like -ing, -less, -ness, -ship.

Principal parts of verbs are given in small capitals after the vocabulary titles, except when the parts are regularly formed by adding -ed or -d and -ing (see RULES FOR SPELLING, pp. 965-967).

Plurals are given whenever they are irregular in form or when, from analogy, an irregular form might be expected. For the regular formation of plurals see RULES FOR SPELLING, pp. 965-967.

See PLURAL, after such words as black, fish, trout, etc., refers to the Note under the word PLURAL in the Vocabulary.

Comparatives and superlatives of adjectives are given in small capitals after the vocabulary word except where they are made by the simple addition of -er and -est or by the use of more and most. See COMPARE, v. t. in the Vocabulary.

Certain derivatives are run on after the primitive word when the meaning may easily be gathered from the suffix and the primitive. Each suffix so used, as -er, -hood, -ic, -ness, -ship, is defined in its vocabulary place.

= preceding a word in small capitals indicates that the vocabulary word has the same meaning as the word in small capitals and that the latter is the preferred form.

"The Hall of Fame for great Americans," the gift of an anonymous donor, was erected in 1900 at University Heights, New York City, to commemorate the lives and achievements of distinguished citizens of the United States. It consists of a long colonnade in which are placed bronze tablets inscribed with the names of those who have been elected and, beneath the colonnade, a corridor and halls for portraits and other mementos. Elections are held every five years. Nominations from the public are received by the Senate of New York University and transmitted to an electorate of one hundred prominent citizens, 51 electoral votes being necessary to a choice. Only persons who have been dead ten or more years are eligible to be chosen. In 1900, 29 names received the necessary 51 votes. In 1905, after some modification of the rules (eligibility being extended to women and to foreign-born Americans), eleven names were added, and in 1910, eleven more, making the total number at present, 51. The next election will be held in 1915.
